Chapter 1 by Tobi Steele

PERCY P.O.V.

I trudged wearily down the sidewalk, the fierce wind whipping my hair in my eyes. "I need a haircut," I thought to myself. But I knew I wouldn't get one. My mom had always cut my hair, even when I was a teenager. To get it done at a barber's shop now seemed like a disgrace to her memory. So I would continue to live with this wild hair. The trees in the grass lots to my right swayed rhythmically as if in time to a silent song. All around me, the city was alive. Cars honked on the busy street to my left, stray animals and abandoned pets screeching loudly as they swerved out of the way of the oncoming vehicles. Umbrellas and ponchos of all sizes painted the city a collage of colors and patterns. Their owners walked with me on the sidewalk walked civilians of all sizes and colors, texting or talking loudly on phones. "I saved these people," I thought miserably, "but I didn't save the people who mattered the most to me."

Chapter 2 by Destinee Walker

I wondered through the cemetery past the unknown graves, though the trees where grave markers for the demigods are placed behind a magic barrier similar to camp half bloods. I walk to their statues in the middle of the cemetery barely holding in my rage. I could do nothing! I thought. I'm supposed to be this great hero but they... I wasn't... I-I couldn't... Well at least their graves are well kept, it was the least I could do, because i'm the one at fault. I stand shakily on my feet weak to the bone. It wasn't fair why do I get to live when they all... No I promised her, I promised them I would not go down that path. I start to walk, crying as I made my way out of the cemetery. I barely make it to the exit when I feel his presence.
